Did Scientists really find water on mars?

By-Amanuel Alemayehu (Grade 11)

Recently, media outlets went wild with headlines that read "WATER FOUND ON MARS" or something similar. Could this be true? Has decades of searching come to an end. Is there really liquid water on Mars? Can the Red Planet support life and are we not alone in the universe? Short answer is NO.

Let me explain. On September 28, scientists announced that the dark streaks that have been photographed on the surface of Mars were caused by flowing water. However, this water is not in the normal water most of us envision. The water on the surface of Mars is found as a mixture with salts. This water can only exist on Mars surface in its salty form because in this form, it can withstand the planets extreme temperatures. This makes it improbable that life would exist on Mars. This means that unlike the headlines would have you believed this is not the end of the road.

May be a nice house, a car or even a couple of kids...me personally a future with a private chef wouldn't hurt. You may have a plan or you may not . My goal here isn't for you to have the perfect answer but for you to think. The future is what you make it out to be. Whether you see yourself relaxing on a beach, or scoring a 100 in the coming national exam, go after what makes you happy. 5 Motivation Tips for Students

Motivation Tip 1: Get Perspective!

When you start feeling like homework is a drag, it might help to start thinking about the reason you're doing homework in the first place. The work you do now really is important, even though it's probably hard to see sometimes. In truth, your nightly homework is really work that will form the foundation for your future. Right now you are probably being forced to study topics that don't interest you at all.

Motivation Tip 2: Get an Attitude!

Are you a math whiz? A great writer? Are you artistic-or maybe good at solving puzzles? Most students have a special talent in one particular area, so they enjoy doing homework in that topic. The problem comes when they avoid doing the other stuff. Sound familiar? The good news is that you don't need to love everything. Just pick one area you love and become the self-appointed expert in your school. Get a serious attitude! Think of yourself as the very best at that one topic, and then make it a reality. Become a star!

Motivation Tip 3: Get Competitive!

This problem could be real or imagined. Either way, this problem is the best kind! If you have a competitive spirit, you can have a lot of fun with this one.

Motivation Tip 4: Get Your Eye on the Prize!

If you get bored just thinking about homework, then you may need to focus on setting and reaching goals. For instance, if you are having trouble getting started on a big science project, then divide your project into steps. Then, reward yourself each time you finish a step successfully.

Motivation Tip 5: Get Support!

It's unfortunate but true that some students don't receive much encouragement or support when it comes to school work. Some students don't have any encouragement from family or don't even have any family at all. But that doesn't mean nobody cares. There are many people who care. People in your school have a big stake in your success. They are judged on your performance. If you don't do well, they don't do well.
